A collection of video-recorded interviews with migrants is available here to students and teachers. This collection holds interviews with persons who went through immigration or displacement and with those who seek asylum in Israel. The interviewees, like most Israelis share the experience of being uprooted from their homes and adapting to a new environment. We believe that the study of these experiences and education about them, may promote understanding, tolerance and cohesion in the Israeli society.

The interviews were collected by students in DEMO courses. Posted are only the interviews of those who gave their consent (in writing) for posting on the website. Each interview is accompanied by a short summary and key words and the collection index makes it possible to search for specific items. The collection is being continuously updated. Based on DEMO experiences the following uses are recommended:

- Presentation of interviews in class to activate an open discussion on the experience of migration.
- Presentation of selected extracts from a number of interviews in class to trigger a discussion on focused issues (for example, migration in adolescence, families' migration, voluntary vs. forced migration, the experience of asylum seekers etc.). The choice of relevant interviews can be made based on the summaries and key words.
- Presentation of interviews to engage students' motivation to perform interviews with migrants as a course assignment or research project.
- Presentation of interviews in conferences and other academic and professional settings to demonstrate personal experiences of migrants.
- Analysis of interviews on selected topics for academic papers and publications.
